

Hao-min Cheng received the medical degree in Faculty of Medicine from National Yang-Ming University, Taipei, Taiwan, in 2000 with the outstanding award among Graduate and the Ph.D. degrees in Faculty of Medicine, The University of Adelaide, Australia in 2013. He has been a cardiologist for more than 17 years with the sub-specialty of interventional cardiology and cardiovascular epidemiologist. As an associate professor in National Yang-Ming University, he has been granted the awards of excellence in Clinical and Internship Teaching numerous times. He is currently the director of Centre for Evidence-based Medicine in Taipei Veterans General Hospital, and his research has been focusing on cardiovascular hemodynamics, hypertension management, and evidence-based health care with more than 200 articles published in peer-reviewed journals and several patents in US, Japan, and Taiwan. Meanwhile, he is an editor in BMC cardiovascular disorders and JBI evidence synthesis and has been involved in editorial and peer-review work of many international SCI listed journals. To achieve the goal of evidence-based health care, he has developed the innovative techniques relating to cardiovascular hemodynamics and endeavored to facilitate the technology transfer from research to industrialization.